

I'm a resistance fighter™

Combating antimicrobial resistance (AMR)

As an infection control practitioner, I realize most patients don't know that common bacteria, including resistant organisms that may be present on their own skin, can cause life-threatening infections after undergoing surgery. This is why I ensure careful adherence to patient skin preparation and other protocols to reduce infections associated with surgery or other invasive procedures. Because all of us need to be resistance fighters.

Learn more at AntimicrobialResistanceFighters.org

