Combating antimicrobial resistance (AMR)

As infectious disease specialist working with cancer patients, I understand that antibiotics play a decisive role in successfully preventing and treating infections. Many patients receiving chemotherapy or hematopoietic progenitor cell transplantation have significant infections with antimicrobial resistant organisms, so it is fundamental for me to implement strategies to contain and prevent these deadly microorganisms. Because all of us need to be resistance fighters.

Learn more at AntimicrobialResistanceFighters.org