

A close-up photograph of a woman with long blonde hair hugging a young child with brown hair. The woman is looking down at the child with a gentle expression. The child is also looking down. The background is softly blurred, suggesting an outdoor setting. The image is partially covered by a dark orange diagonal shape at the bottom.

I'm a resistance fighter™

Combating antimicrobial resistance (AMR)

As a mother, I worry about my child's safety in a world where antibiotics won't necessarily treat infections. I teach him that good hygiene habits, like washing his hands, are important for staying healthy. Still, it's impossible to protect him from every germ. When he does get a cold, I no longer insist that his doctor prescribe antibiotics, because I now understand that antibiotics only treat bacterial infections, not viral ones, and that my son should only take them when absolutely necessary. I advocate for education on antibiotics, because no parent should have to fear for their child's life from illnesses that were once easily curable. Because all of us need to be resistance fighters.

Learn more at AntimicrobialResistanceFighters.org

A close-up photograph of a woman with long blonde hair hugging a young child with brown hair. The woman has her eyes closed and a gentle smile, while the child looks down thoughtfully. The background is softly blurred, suggesting an outdoor setting.

I'm a resistance fighter™

Combating antimicrobial resistance (AMR)

As a mother, I worry about my child's safety in a world where antibiotics won't necessarily treat infections. I teach him that good hygiene habits, like washing his hands, are important for staying healthy. Still, it's impossible to protect him from every germ. When he does get a cold, I no longer insist that his doctor prescribe antibiotics, because I now understand that antibiotics only treat bacterial infections, not viral ones, and that my son should only take them when absolutely necessary. I advocate for education on antibiotics, because no parent should have to fear for their child's life from illnesses that were once easily curable. Because all of us need to be resistance fighters.

Learn more at

AntimicrobialResistanceFighters.org

